

ARGENTINE.

Much Red Tape Over the Liquor Business —Every Joint Closed.

There is much red tape displayed about Mayor Williard's declaration for a "dry druth." Some of the jointists claim that they have sold liquor on the quiet, while the chief of police maintains that not a drop is being disposed of. He is being materially assisted in enforcing the Mayor's order by a little fight on the inside. It is reported that the fight is made on political lines and this is the cause of the trouble among the jointists. During the last election some of the "dealers" worked for the men who got in office. Their less fortunate brethren who worked teeth-and-toe-nail for the defeated side are watching them like hawks and will not allow them to sell a drop without being reported.
