

The Cable Broke.

The Brooklyn avenue and Tenth street cable cars were stalled just before 6 o'clock last night by the breaking of the Brooklyn avenue "rope" at the curve, corner of Brooklyn avenue and Tenth street. It took about three hours to repair the damage so that travel could be resumed. The company recently put in a new rope on the Tenth street division and has a new one on hand for the Brooklyn avenue circuit, which will be put in in a day or two. The break came just at the busy time of day when people were going home from business and other lines had to be patronized. People who live south of the Eighteenth street line and had to walk from there over Brooklyn avenue found the gasoline lamps all out, and as the street crossings were all muddy there were a great many harsh words said about the lamplighters.

02-10-1893-DailyJournal-p3-TheCableBroke