THEY CHATTERED.

And It Was All Over Three Innocent Looking Chinamen.

It was out near the intersection of Independence and Garfield avenues yesterday afternoon, and three pretty and fashionably dressed misses were on their way to visit a friend. The wind whistled sharply, turning three lovely faces into a rose colored bouquet. Three Chinamen, dressed in their Sunday blouses and on their way to a mission Sunday school, were chattering unintelligible gibberish on the opposite corner. And this is what the fair young Americans were saying, while the wind played hide and seek around John's wide pantaloons and underneath his loose hanging blouse:

"O, do look at those funny Chinamen! Ain't they just too comical for anything? But don't they look cold, though?"

"Don't they, though!" another re-echoed in the same breath.

"But say, girls, just see what funny clothes they have on. I should think they'd freeze to death."

"Well, I should say so!" added the other member of the party, a 'witching little maid with flashing eyes and curly hair. "Wonder why they don't take those awfully funny shirts they wear outside and tuck them —" But the reporter who had heard this interesting story coughed unexpectedly and the rest was lost.

Will Still Be Reported
