

Charges a Garbage Combine.

J. W. Skinner, who has secured the contract for removing the garbage in the city and has gone to work at considerable expense to build wagons and prepare for the onslaught on filth, has a new source of grief. A combination has been formed by other contractors, he claims, which he thinks will drive him out of business, unless the city comes to his rescue. Where the garbage is bulked at the various hotels and restaurants about town the profit in the business is greatest. Mr. Skinner has discovered that many of the hotels and restaurants have already made arrangements for removing the garbage, and the contractors, who will haul it away free, propose to feed it to hogs or use it for fertilizing purposes.
