Vegetables in Great Abundance and Prices Low—Fruits Coming In.

In June the thermometer generally rises rapidly and there is a corresponding fall in the price of vegetables and fruit. Although there has not been any warm weather to speak of this spring, garden products appear to be as plentiful and cheap this week as if the past month had been all sunshine. Home-grown vegetables are on the market in great abundance and are cheaper than at any time during the year.

Radishes and lettuce are a drag on the market. About thirty large radishes may be bought for 5 cents, and six and ten bunches of lettuce may be had at the same price. Peas and beans are worth 5 cents a quart. Good new potatoes are scarce, and they are worth 40 and 50 cents a peck. New cabbage and cauliflowers are selling at 1 and 2 cents a pound. New turnips and beets are worth 5 and 10 cents a dozen. A dozen bunches of rhubarb may be had for 10 cents and new corn sells for 25 cents a dozen. Asparagus sells at 5 and 10 cents a pound. Egg plant is the latest vegetable on the market and is selling at $1.50 and $2 per dozen. Cucumbers are plentiful and retail at the rate of 20 and 25 cents a dozen.

Cherries, peaches and blackberries are the newest fruits. The peaches are fair considering the early season, and are selling at 10 and 15 cents a dozen. The cherries shown are not quite ripe, but are selling well at 10 cents a quart. Blackberries and raspberries sell at 15 cents a quart. Fine strawberries are worth 10 and 15 cents a quart. Fine pine apples may be had at 15 and 20 cents apiece, while good oranges are worth 20 and 30 cents a dozen. Bananas are on the market in great quantities at 10 cents a dozen.

Spring chickens are still scarce and the prices range from 40 to 75 cents apiece.
