Preliminary Hearing of the Little Murder Case Resumed.

DR. VAN POSSEN ON THE STAND.

His Testimony Brings Out Some Few Points, But Its Value to the Defendant is Doubtful.

What May Be Brrought Out Later—Town or Country.

The preliminary hearing of the Little murder case was resumed this morning before Justice Burke in the district court room in a very business-like manner, no desire being manifested by any one for a further continuance. This was due to the fact that Dr. Charles Van Possen, who had been sought after for testimony for the defense, was on hand early. He had been driving his time between Chicago and Milwaukee and that accounted for his not coming in contact with the numerous witnesses that had been sworn to him. He was present on the stand without any real delay. Hearings took him in hand for direct examination.

The attendance was very large, probably owing to the interest in what Van Possen would have to say that would be of material advantage to the defendant. The attorney for the latter had not been in the application for a continuance had, but he had not been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand. He had been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand. He had been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand.

Dr. Van Possen testified that he had been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand. He had been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand. He had been in the courtroom until he had been called to the stand.

When the shooting occurred he said he had seen Van Possen's shoulder and that he had seen Van Possen's shoulder and that he had seen Van Possen's shoulder.

Throughout the examination the defense has several constructive criticisms to make. It has succeeded in developing the fact that some of the state's witnesses, including Van Possen, saw Johnston's right side or what his right hand was doing at the time he was shot. Johnston's right side was toward the door.

The doctor was questioned very closely regarding what happened after Johnston was carried into Conroy's drug store, especially regarding the reports of the dead man's eyes. He said that W. D. Hunt, some other man and himself carried Johnston from the street.
