

Mrs. Annie Potter, wife of Colonel Eli Potter, and her neighbor, William Albright, deputy county treasurer, don't agree about where the dividing line between their lots is located. Albright had the county surveyor locate a monument showing the line which he charges Annie with destroying. Dividing lines between property are frequently sources of contention and sometimes result in litigation and this case is by no means an exceptional one. William has had Annie arrested on a charge of destroying a monument set up by the surveyor.
