CRY BRINGS FORTUNE

Childish Warning 20 Years Ago Makes Woman an Heiress.

The entire estate of the late Eli Potter, pioneer insurance man of Kansas City, valued at $100,000 to $150,000, is left to his adopted daughter, Mrs. Ella Potter Jones, as "material evidence of an act of the child which in all probability saved the life of Mrs. Anna Potter, my wife," according to the provisions of Potter's will, filed for probate in the Wyandotte and Jackson county courts.

A cry of the child, warning Mrs. Potter of danger from a toppling chimney, which was swaying in the wind during a storm twenty years ago, resulted in the child being adopted and raised by the Potters. The child's name was Ella Drysdale. She is now the wife of O. W. Jones, 3522 Tracy avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

The estate is largely real estate and bonds.

Potter died at the home of Mrs. Jones. He had made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Jones since the death of $5 prize will be given.
